He's known for being one of the funniest men working in Hollywood today.

But Paul Rudd proved he's also got a heart of gold as he hosted his second annual All-Star Bowling Benefit for children who stutter in New York, on Monday.

The 44-year-old actor could be seen throughout the fund raising event performing various comedic antics while bowling at the lanes.

Gearing up: Paul Rudd hosted his second annual All-Star Bowling Benefit for children who stutter in New York, on Monday

The I Love You, Man star taught some of the fundamentals of the sport to the children gathered for the event.

But when it came his turn to demonstrate his bowling prowess it appeared he may have needed some practise in the art.

Performing a comedic kick in the air after seeming to land the ball in the gutter the surrounding kids erupted into both applause and giggles.

The set up: Rudd got his form down before letting loose

But the antics also seemed to have been choreographed to entertain the youngsters, who the star was intent upon helping.

Wearing brown suede loafers and tan chinos, Rudd went casual in a simple chequered button down shirt.

The attire was well-suited for the affair, hosted at a local bowling alley.

Something to smile about: The Anchor Man star is passionate about helping children who stammer

Later the This Is 40 star posed with a group of the children as they each held up a brightly coloured bowling ball.

But this is not the only charity the actor has launched since becoming famous.

He also hosts with Jason Sudeikis and Ron Riggle the annual The Big Slick Poker Tournament, benefiting Mercy Children's Hospital in Kansas.

Putting his star power to work: The previous year Rudd got some of his celebrity friends to attend the benefit

Meanwhile, Rudd is starring in the highly-anticipated sequel to Anchorman, produced by Judd Apatow and directed by Adam McKay.

The Paramount Pictures comedy, due out December 20, brings back original cast members Paul Rudd, Steve Carell, Christina Applegate, and Will Ferrell.

However, Anchorman 2 also stars Harrison Ford, Vince Vaughn, Kristen Wiig, and Meagan Good.

But half the fun will surely be watching the parade of cameos from Jim Carrey, Sacha Baron Cohen, Nicole Kidman, Liam Neeson, Drake, Kanye West, Tina Fey, Amy Poehler, and John C. Reilly.

He's one of our own, his parents are British. He seems like such a polite and down to earth guy, he might speak with an American accent but he's got British sensibilities. :)
